Getting Started with the IBM HMC CLI

Although the Hardware Management Console GUI is a common way to manage Power Systems, I've found it worth getting familiar with the CLI.

The command line interface allows you to automate tasks, which can make monitoring or even creating new LPARs easier.

If you need to create a lot of new LPARs with their profiles on a managed system, using the command line can save you hours.

How to use SQL to find files

needing Reorganisation

While there are quite a few methods for finding candidates for Reorganise Physical Files (RGZPFM), lots of them are old and some of them take a long time and resources to get results.

So here is a new one using ACS Run SQL Scripts, that may be faster and is more controllable.
